ABSTRACT

Premarital sex is a sexual intercourse practiced by individuals who are unmarried. It is generally used in reference to individuals who are presumed not yet of marriageable age or between adults who will presumably marry eventually, but who are engaging in sexual activity prior to marriage. It is manifestation in life and conduct.

The purpose of the study is to know the reasons why teenagers engaged in premarital sex, the behavior of teenagers and the way of thinking of teenagers nowadays. The researcher chose twenty(20) rightful respondents, ten (10) males and ten (10) female, of which are teenagers that had engage in premarital sex and adults who experienced premarital sex during their adolescent years. The first phase of the research involves an interview of respondents. The final phase involves a questionnaire of which they answered based on their experiences.

As they go on with their study, they came up with a result that shows the different perception of teenagers who engaged in premarital sex and adults who had experienced premarital sex during their adolescent age. This research will provide valuable information regarding premarital sex among teenagers. This information will likely impact the lives of future generations.
